Appropriate Use of Colors

A proper use of colors is important for achieving an optimum balance in the creation of graphic pieces and for ensuring greater readability and communication. These are some recommendations:

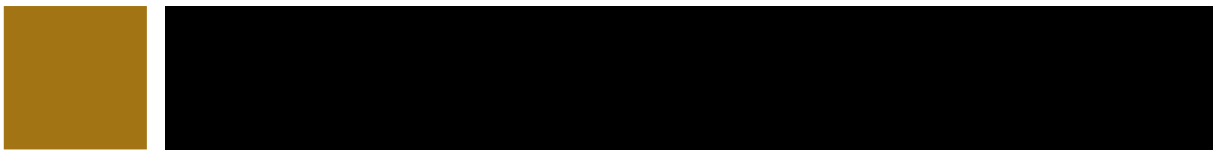

Blues

When using several types of blue in our palette (if they are to be used at the same time), we suggest attempting to use them in proportions of approximately 80/20. This is to ensure that one of the two blues is much more prominent than the other, and that they are not competing with each other. Aquamarine is suggested especially for the health line, in very limited proportions.

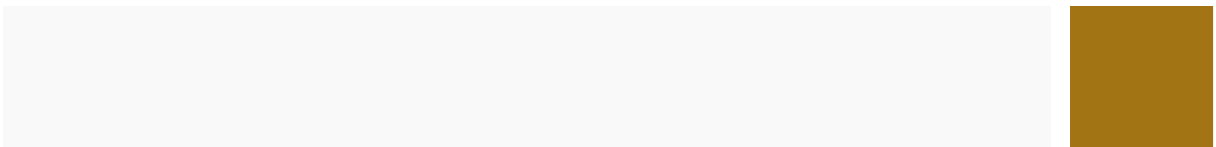

Gold

Our gold color is the only warm color in our palette, and therefore it should be used to accentuate and balance out cold and neutral colors when deemed appropriate. It can work with blues, whites, and blacks. Here, also, you must be careful of the proportions used.

White

White is synonymous with space and cleanliness, and therefore it must be prominent in situations where you need the composition to breathe.

COLORS

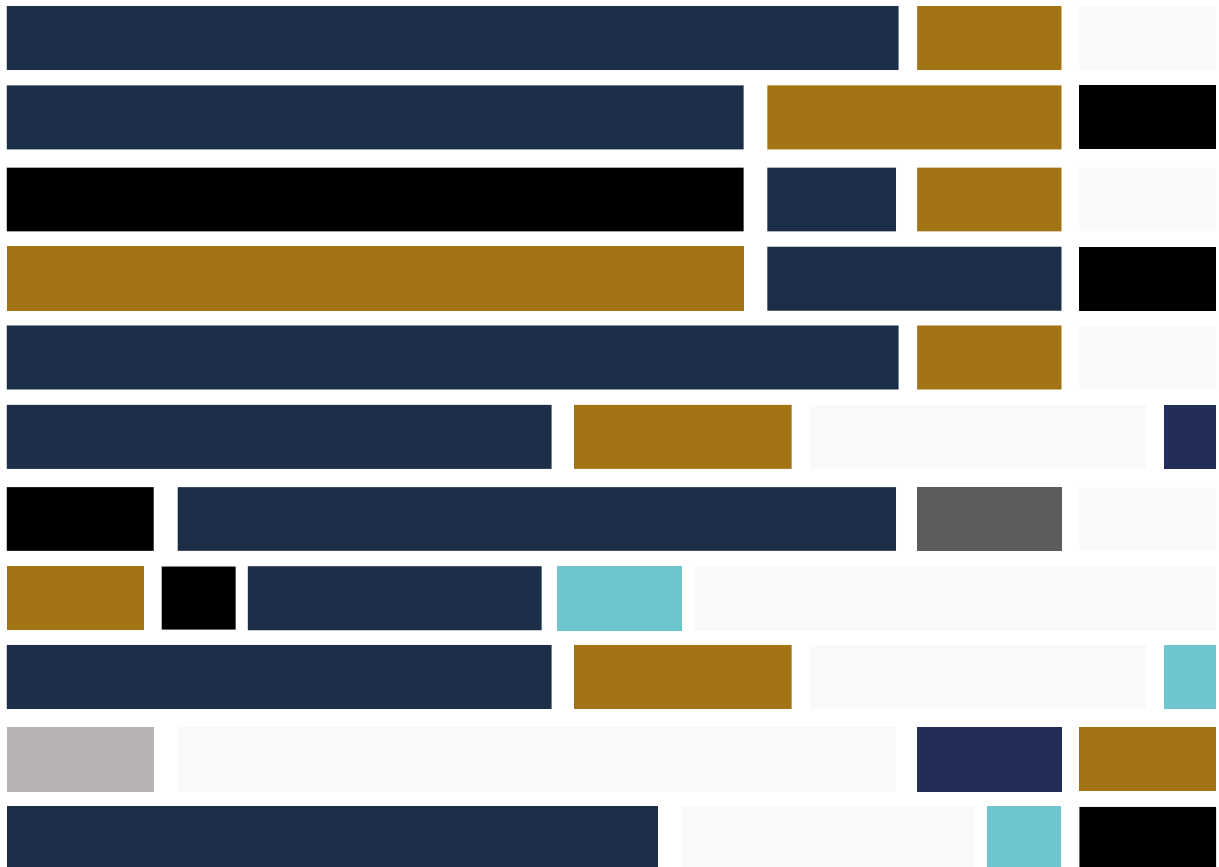

Grays and Blacks

You must be very careful not to overuse these colors. We suggest using them in paragraph text, on images to contrast text or logos, and in necessary background.

Proportions of Colors Used Together

Example of proportions using the colors together. It is not mandatory to use all of the colors, but we suggest a balance between them, as needed.

Additional Secondary Colors

These are colors taken from the official PALIG color bar (pg. 29), in order to use them for campaigns or pieces as a whole that need to be highlighted in a corporate way, but with a general differential look.

Cream

Light

They are light colors that in their proper use of proportion will allow us variety in the details, highlighting specific sections in a simple way. Important to be careful to use in proportions no more than 30% over the main and secondary colors.

COMPLEMENTARY

Elements

Color Band-Secondary Colors

This design element is available for horizontal use in graphic materials, so as to slightly balance an image or design.

It must be used at the top of the composition, and its height must be the same as that of the text of the document. The colors of the band should not be used individually, but as a single design element.

It can be used individually or accompanied by a black band of the same height. This depends on the cleanliness and balance required in the graphic material.

Recommendation: Use the color band only once. Do not use it more than once in the same graphic. It is suitable for certain covers.

These are the only ways of using it.

Main Logo

Size and Proportions

X represents the unit of measurement. In this way, you can ensure that the brand has the correct proportions in any format and with any measurements.

Clear Space

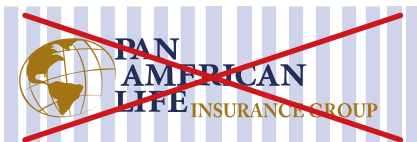

The logo must have sufficient clear space around it so that it can breathe, and to create distance between it and other elements in all directions. Example: If the logo is 5 cm wide, keep a minimum of around 1 cm of clear space around it.

Acceptable Solid Backgrounds

Unacceptable Use of the Logo

Use only approved colors for solid color backgrounds; without textures.

Make sure to never place it at an angle.

Make sure there is enough contrast to see the logo properly.

Make sure to never place additional text on the logo.
